Authorization for this examiner's amendment was given in a telephone interview with Nancy Vensko on September 20, 2004.

The application has been amended as follows:

17. (Currently Amended) The composition of Claim 6, wherein said synthetic omega-hydroxyceramide comprises is 16-(16-hydroxyhexadecyl)oxyhexadecanoic acid.

Reasons for Allowance

The previous rejections are withdrawn in light of Applicants' amendments to the claims and arguments, which now disclose TGase1 and a synthetic lipid vesicle comprising omega-hydroxyceramide, including Applicants' arguments that the combination provides for unexpected results in activity of the TGase1, i.e. the TGase I enzyme attaches ceramides to proteins, thus resulting in attaching the omega-hydroxyceramide to the various skin proteins for use in treatment of the skin. See page 11 of the Amendment filed December 13, 2001.
